

James Omolo

Date: 06 June, 16.00 Uhr

Venue: Room X-B2-101

This book aims to shed light on the various aspects of the lives of African migrant workers in Europe, a multifaceted narrative marked by challenges, resilience, and aspiration.

Departing from their homelands in search of better economic prospects and opportunities, these individuals embark on journeys fraught with uncertainties and hardships. Upon arrival, they often encounter a complex web of legal, social, and economic barriers that shape their experiences in their host countries. Despite these adversities, African migrant communities demonstrate remarkable resilience and resourcefulness.

Book launch: Against the odds. Life of African migrant workers in Europe

James Omolo is a Kenyan living in Poland and a human rights activist for people of African descent. In December 2019, James became a United Nations Fellow on People of African Descent under the United Nations Office of The High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). He has authored four books on race relations, including Strangers at the Gate: Black Poland; Crossing the Color Line: Interracial Marriage and Biracial Identity; The Beast: White Supremacy; Different But The Same. His past publications also include; Chinese foreign policy in Sudan and, Poland and Africa: past, present, and future. ■